Be direct, such as “no, I can’t” or “no, I don’t want to.” Don’t apologize and give all sorts of reasons. Don’t lie. Lying will most likely lead to guilt—and remember, this is what you are trying to avoid feeling. Remember that it is better to say no now than be resentful later. Be polite, such as “Thanks for asking.”

How to Stop Saying Yes When You Want to Say No

When I asked my Twitter followers if they agreed with this statement: “I have a hard time saying no,” 48% of people replied that it was true for them and 52% replied that it wasn’t. That means that about half of you struggle to say no when people make requests of you that you don’t want to agree to.
